Ball giving, with New York's resources and experience, is no longer to be viewed as an experiment whose success is problemactical, but as an art exercised with a dignified assurance of the inevitably happy conclusion.

The arrangements for the Russian soirce were pro-jected with incomparable lavishness and completeness, while the suggestions of good taste restricted both decorations and appointments from the mere vulgar profuseness of ill-regulated extravagance. We do not remember ever having seen the Academy of Music present a more elegant interior than that which formed seene of last night's festivities. Our Merchant Princes need to congratulate themselves upon a tout ensemble quite unrivaled, and reflecting alike credit on designers and artificers.

THE BALL-ROOM.

The interior of the Academy, like the surging crowd within it, had put on a new gala dress in honor of the occasion; the lobbies, freshly papered in oak and crimson panels, were handsomely carpeted and furnished with inviting lounges and home-like sofas. At the extreme ends of the maine hall large marble female figures, upholding lights, were stationed; the walls of these compartments were adorned with some of Brady's photographs; among them the portraits of Gens. Meade. McClellan, Grant, Burnside, Dix. Banks, Sickels, Roseerans, Gillmore, Halleck and Fremont, Lieut.-Gen. Scott, Admirals Du Pont, Farragut and Paulding, Baron Stoeckel, the Russian Minister, and a fairly exeduted grouping of the officers of the squadron the guests of the evening.

In the decoration of the apartment the American sentiment was plainly apparent-flags above and below, the American shield surrounded by the Russian colors, large standards and haby flags. Even the red and white festoons depending from the gallery seemed only a few borrowed stripes from the flag of the free. These festoons were bordered with garlands of flowers formed of feathers, which also surrounded the stars that caught up the gracefully-disposed drapery. In the ornaments of the table was also evident the entente cordiale existing between Russia and the United States: a temple and statue of Alexander II. was matched by one representing our own honest and noble President, and many of the ernaments united both colors, fraternizing with amiable harmony. The serew steam-corvette Pelorus caught fire in the Env of Biscay. and at one time the flames got such headway that the bonts were lowered to enable the crew to save themselves. A large vessel under full sail being seen about five miles distant, three guns were fired and rockets and blue lights burnt, but without taking any further notice of these signals of distress than by the discharge of a single gan, the strange vessel held on her course. This apparent inhumanity is explained by the British Admiralty on the supposition that she was a Union Chicks merchantman, who took the Pelorus to be a Confederate erniser employing the ordinary devices to lure her into
